S.A. Resolution #18

Expanding the Collegiate Readership Program to include the Wall Street Journal

ABSTRACT: This resolution requests the Student Assembly to allocate funds from the Collegiate Readership Program (CRP) surplus toward an undergraduate-wide subscription to the Wall Street Journal. Such a subscription would provide professors of said students free access as well.

Whereas, the Collegiate Readership Program (CRP) has sought to enhance Cornell's learning environment since 2004;

Whereas, CRP encourages lifelong learning, creating newspaper readership habits, and increasing student awareness of local, national, and international events;

Whereas, CRP has traditionally maintained a relationship with USA Today and the New York Times;

Whereas, CRP allocated $5.00/student/year in the 2016-2018 byline cycle;

Whereas, CRP currently maintains a surplus in excess of $100,000 after ending the relationship with USA Today;

Whereas, students across business courses are currently required to purchase Wall Street Journal (WSJ) access at a semester cost of $15;

Whereas, numerous employers require knowledge attained from member-only articles in the WSJ;

Be it therefore resolved, the Student Assembly use the funds originally intended for the USA Today subscription to expand the Collegiate Readership Program by partnering with the WSJ;

Be it finally resolved, the SA allocate funds from aforementioned surplus toward an undergraduate-wide subscription of the WSJ at $1.75/student/year with professors of said students gaining free access.

Respectfully Submitted,
